Top marketing jobs in canada

Marketing in Canada offers challenges and rewards that few other industries can match. This dynamic and burgundy field mirrors the growth of biddless in Canada's business community, which has seen tremendous improvements since 2009. In 2010, Canada's marketing industry generated $6.98 billion in revenue, a jump of $150 million from a total of $6.83 billion in 2009. The industry's profitability also grew considerably during this period, with profit margins of 11% in 2010, up from 9% in 2009. This strong growth in the industry has led to unsuccessful increases in salaries and employment opportunities. The industry recouped a total of $2.34 billion in employees in 2010, up $90 million from $2.25 billion in 2007. The Canadian economy, which is fueling this expansion in marketing opportunities, is preparing for significant growth in the coming years. Despite the global recession in the wake of the 2008 financial crisis, Canada has emerged as an economic leader and a model for the Western world. Canada experienced one of the strongest economic bumps of any Western nation in the wake of the recession, with a GDP of $1.359 trillion in 2010, 3.1% higher than in 2009. This economic growth is expected to continue between 3.66% and 4.04% by 2016, allowing Canada to remain the world's 13th-largest economy. Marketing professionals may expect a rapid multiplication of employment opportunities and marketing facilities as some key industries develop. The most important of them is the increased dominance of Canada's oil industry. Canada is the sixth largest oil-producing country in the world, producing 2.75 million barrels per day. The development of offshore drilling rigs and increased oil recovery operations in Alberta's oil sands indicate that the industry will continue to grow until 2020. Expanding the oil industry combined with rising oil costs will generate a large number of new businesses, which will turn into marketing businesses into growth levers. As a major manufacturer and exporter, Canada has quickly benefited from the recovery of global markets. In 2010, the manufacturing industry grew by 5.8%, dwarfing major Western powers. This was especially important for Canada's large trading partner in the United States, which imported approximately 75.02% of Canada's total exports. A key industry on which the marketing profession relies is the financial services industry. Banks, insurance companies and financial advice in Canada do not suffer as much as U.S. or global counterparts because of their conservative lending practices and high capital reserves. The World Economic Forum rated Canada's banking system as the safest system in the world. The continued health of these lending institutions supports strong growth in the business community as companies have ready access to credit for business expansion, creation and marketing initiatives. Future Marketing Canada is very brilliant because of Canada's strong economy and its highly technological community. As one of the world's most connected populations, the future of online marketing is set to explode. With a heavily developed infrastructure that provides 3G mobile coverage to 90% of its population, Canada has a population of 66% of which are mobile subscribers. Fifty percent of these mobile phones are internet-ready, and 21 percent of mobile consumers use the web through their phones. Opportunities for marketers are confident of growing at an unprecedented rate as mobile marketing and social media marketing strategies penetrate the consumer market. Salary in the marketing industry is dependent on a number of factors including geographical location, education level, job expertise, work experience and employment industry. The most important of them is work experience and job title, which will dictate the broad outline of salaries and benefits. Entry-level positions provide lucrative salaries compared to most other professions, but can be expected to increase rapidly by showing professional success. A typical entry level marketing position, such as a key account representative, which identifies potential customers and runs their own accounts, can expect a national median salary of $70,736. Market research analysts serve as collecting and analyzing marketing data, and the national median salary of $58,006 was recorded in 2012. Marketing professionals in management positions can expect far more compensation than those in non-managerial jobs. A market integration manager develops and implements marketing initiatives for a particular market, and those in the 50th percention could expect a salary of $91,713 in 2012. A market research manager analyzes the effectiveness of marketing strategies, typically earning a national median salary of $81,707. Many of these professionals are managers of independent marketing firms or are part of mid-sized management teams to large companies. A sales and marketing manager is tasked with developing sales and marketing strategies, and those in the 50th percention could expect $104,848 in 2012. The top marketing executive responsible for creating a comprehensive marketing strategy could earn $146,190 if they were in the 50th percenti of takers. Professional associations are many organizations that support the marketing industry through networking opportunities and information sources. Many of these organizations may provide valuable resources in meeting prospective customers, business partners and employers. Marketing training there are two main types of post-secondary institutions in Canada. Universities offer bachelor's, master's and doctoral degrees, while colleges offer diploma programs. With approximately 1.2 million universities In this country, Canada has the highest proportion of university and college graduates among G7 countries. Approximately 22% of professionals are graduates of the university. The importance of a strong academic background for a marketing job cannot be underestimated. Most entry levels require a bachelor's degree, although the diploma may be acceptable in some cases. As professionals progress and reach a managerial position becomes a priority, it is often necessary to return to school for a master's degree. Most management in the industry is awarded to marketing professionals with strong educational credentials, as well as a long and successful career. In the highest ranks of the marketing industry, managers are marketing and marketing managers. These rare and lucrative situations are often awarded to professionals with the highest academic credentials along with careers with extraordinary and lasting achievement over a remarkable period of time. The majority of these EXECUTIVES have at least a master's degree and many have earned a PhD.
